BLACK SEA FLEET IN REVOLT.

Mutineers Hold Full Sway
in Sevastopol.

ODESSA IN PERIL.

Rebel Warships Expected To Bombard the Port.

The news from Southern Russia continues to be of the gravest character.

The fortress of Sevastopol is in the hands of mutinous troops, only one regiment remaining loyal. This regiment is now besieged in barracks by the incensed mutineers.

The whole Black Sea fleet has joined in the mutiny, and all the ports of the Black Sea, mindful of the Kniat Potemkin mutiny, are dreading a visit from the rebellious squadron.

Owing to the interruption of the telegraph service details of the mutiny are not obtainable. It is certain, however, that the fortress is practically in the hands of the revolutionaries.

The council of workmen's delegates in St. Petersburg has taken advantage of the rising to threaten a general strike throughout Russia if the factories closed by the Government are not forthwith reopened.

REVOLT OF THE FLEET.

ST. PETERSBURG, Monday.—The vessels of the Black Sea fleet have joined the revolutionaries at Sevastopol.

Deputations from the battleship Kniat Potemkin, which was rechristened the Panteleim after the mutiny some months ago, and from the cruiser Otchakoff, have attended a meeting at the naval barracks.

One dispatch says that the other warships in the roadstead have not replied to the signals of the mutineers calling upon them to join the movement.—Reuter.

ST. PETERSBURG, Monday, 2.35 p.m.—The latest reports from Sevastopol are to the effect that the crews of all the ships of the Black Sea Fleet have expressed sympathy with the mutineers. No information is obtainable at the Admiralty here regarding the development of events at Sevastopol. Telegrams sent to that port remain unanswered, but the indications are that the mutineers continue to be complete masters of the situation.—Reuter.

TERROR AT ODESSA.

ST. PETERSBURG, Monday.—A telegram from Odessa states that an alarming rumour is current that the mutineers of the Black Sea Fleet intend to visit Odessa and take possession of the town.—Exchange.

LOYAL SOLDIERS BESIEGED.

PARIS, Monday.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of the "Matin" states that the Brest regiment, after having joined in the mutiny, listened to the counsels of their officers and left the mutineers and returned to barracks, where they entrenched themselves. They are now besieged by the mutinous sailors. The crews of the warships have mutinied.—Exchange.

OPEN REVOLUTION.

ST. PETERSBURG, Monday.—The report is confirmed that the commandant of the fortress and General Sjedelnikoff, the commander of the Brest regiment, have been released, that the artillerymen have joined the mutineers, and the commanders and officers of the warships have been arrested.

The Lithuanian Regiment has arrived from Simferopol, and a steamer has left Odessa with other troops. Reinforcements are also being sent from Pavlograd. Admiral Chukhnin has handed over the command of the Black Sea Fleet to General Moller.

The Sakomelski company of sappers has joined the mutineers, who are still working hand in hand with the workmen. The rising is described as being of an openly revolutionary character.—Reuter.

ENGLISHMAN'S APPEAL.

PARIS, Monday.—The Foreign Office has heard that an English agent at Sevastopol has cabled to his principals for help, and that life and property are no longer safe.—Lafan.

THE KING'S SICK-BED VISIT.

King Edward, with characteristic kindness, has made a special journey on a motor-car to West-acre, Norfolk, where Admiral Hamond is lying dangerously ill with cancer in the throat.

His Majesty yesterday motored from Sandringham to the seat of Colonel Frank Vivian, Houghton, and shot over the preserves, which are amongst the finest in eastern England.

WRECKS AND FLOODS.

Hurricane Causes Havoc Round
British Coasts.

MANY LIVES LOST.

Latest reports show that an enormous amount of damage has been caused by the storm that for over twenty-four hours raged round the coasts of Britain.

From various places in England, Ireland, and Scotland comes news of wrecks, floods, and casualties due to the hurricane or mountainous seas.

The most serious loss of life occurred on the Irish coast, at St. Kernaghan Point Island, Magee, where the steamer Peridot, trading between Glasgow, Belfast, and Larne Lough, was driven ashore. The captain and crew of ten men were all drowned. Eight bodies have been washed ashore near Larne badly mutilated and bruised.

Many other wrecks are reported, and the lifeboats have rescued scores of men. At Bangor, Co. Down, the schooner Jane Kay was driven on the rocks and the lifeboat could not be launched owing to the tremendous sea, but eventually an exceptionally large wave threw the vessel against the sea wall, and the crew were easily taken off.

The Whistable oyster fishery watch-boat Bessie was found upon the Hook Sands, and brought into Margate Harbour by No. 2 lifeboat. There was no trace of the crew, and their fate is at present unknown.

RESCUED BY ROCKETS.

The French trawling-boat Joseph E. Yvonne drove ashore on Barnet Bank, near Southwold. Her masts were visible above water, and one man was rescued by the rocket apparatus. Other men were seen clinging to the rigging, and many visitors at Southwold watched through telescopes the lifeboat put off and with great difficulty rescue the men.

At Dover the wind attained the hurricane velocity of seventy miles an hour, and enormous seas swept over the breakwater and parade. The road at East Cliff was torn up, and tons of beach strewn on the parade. There was no communication with the Continent from half-past three on Sunday afternoon until yesterday morning.

Three transatlantic liners, the Graf Waldersee, the Patricia, and the Kronland, had to stay outside the harbour in the storm, it being unsafe for them to approach.

The Graf Waldersee eventually signalled that she was taking her fourteen passengers for Dover on to Hamburg. They will, of course, be sent home at the expense of the company.

FRANTIC WITH TERROR.

Many of the steerage passengers on the Patricia, bound for New York, were from Central Europe and had never seen the sea before. They were frantic with terror, and one of them actually went raving mad. He was put ashore yesterday, and had to be taken to the infirmary and put in a strait waistcoat.

The roads parallel with the sea at Hastings were flooded. The parade wall was broken, and a large glass shelter was swept from its foundations. In several cases it was deemed necessary to remove the female inmates from houses on the front, against which the sea was breaking.

A man was about to enter a house when he was caught by the sea and washed to the edge of the parade, when a second wave carried him back into safety. The sea brought up tons of grit, and in entrances to some of the houses were blocked to the depth of two feet.

St. Leonard's Pier, promenade, and outfall works were damaged. About fifty feet of iron railings and standards were washed away. Hotels on the sea-front were closed, and suffered severely from the force of the waves.

The Redhill sea-front is strewn with the wreckage of thirty beach cabins, which were dashed to pieces.

MANY YACHTS SUNK.

Tramcars at Folkestone have been stopped by the flooding of the roadway, and the switchback railway on the beach is partially destroyed.

The sea rolled with tremendous force at Sandgate, and Martella Cottage was invaded by the flood. A large quantity of furniture has been either destroyed or carried out to sea.

At Southend the sea washed over the parades, and the old town narrowly escaped being flooded. Many yachts have sunk.

Great seas rolled in with much fury at Rhyl, causing the extreme east end of the promenade to collapse. Parts of the Bettws-y-coed railway line were under water, and the North-Western will not book passengers beyond Talywain.

At Morecambe some small craft were sunk and the promenade roads flooded, so that all vehicular traffic was stopped.

The River Ribble rose and flooded many streets in Preston. Wreckage floated about the streets for hours, and all traffic was stopped. At Peel, in the Isle of Man, great portions of the sea wall were wrecked.

One of the effects at Liverpool was that scores of passengers crossing by the ferry from Birkenhead suffered from sea-sickness.

At Brussels thousands of windows were blown in and telegraphic and telephonic communication between England and the Continent was interrupted.

FLEETS SEIZE TURKISH ISLAND.

Custom-House at Mytilene in the Hands of the Allied Powers.

As the result of the Sultan's refusal to admit international control of the finances of Macedonia, the combined fleet of the Powers yesterday seized Mytilene, one of the islands of the Greek Archipelago.

If the Sultan acts as he has done hitherto when placed in a tight corner, he will now accede immediately to the Powers' demands. Some years ago France seized Mytilene to enforce certain commercial agreements, and Abdul Hamid speedily surrendered.

PARIS, Monday.—Telegrams from Mytilene state that the international squadron entered the harbour to-day without saluting.

Owing to the heavy weather the smaller warships cast anchor in the bay. Four hundred men landed and occupied the Custom-house, the telegraph office, and several other parts of the town. The Turkish garrison retired to the barracks, which an Austrian detachment is now keeping under observation.—Reuter.

ENGLISH CONSUL ATTACKED.

Daring Outrage and Robbery by French
Soldiers at Hyeres.

English residents at Hyeres, in Southern France, have been greatly alarmed by a daring outrage made upon three of their number by French soldiers.

While Mr. Slater, the newly-appointed English Consul, accompanied by Dr. and Mrs. Rooke-Ley, were returning to their hotel, they were attacked, says the "Pall Mall Gazette," by five soldiers in the uniform of the 22nd Colonial Regiment, now stationed at Hyeres.

Dr. Rooke-Ley was seriously injured, and Mr. Slater was thrown heavily to the ground, a revolver being held at his head. The victims were made to disgorge all their valuables, with which the soldiers departed.

PASSENGERS CREMATED.

Ghastly Scenes Follow the Wreck of an Express in Massachusetts.

LINCOLN (Mass.), Monday.—An express train, bound for Montreal, on the Boston and Maine Railroad, collided with the rear of a local train a mile and a half west of here yesterday evening.

Fifteen were killed and thirty injured. The two locomotives by which the express was drawn demolished the two rear-most cars of the local train, and the wreckage caught fire.

The flames burned themselves out, and many of the victims were cremated.—Reuter.

RUSH TO LEND MONEY.

Animated Scenes at Distribution of Prospectuses of Japanese Loan.

The initial steps in the issue yesterday of the Japanese loan drew large crowds to the offices of the City banks which have the business in hand.

Four o'clock was the hour announced for the distribution of prospectuses, and at this time animated scenes were witnessed outside the doors of Parr's Bank, the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, and the Yokohama Specie Bank. It was at the first-named institution that the largest crowd assembled. The arrangements, however, were such that in a short space of time all the prospectuses were delivered, and the City resumed its normal aspect.

MIDNIGHT TELEGRAMS.

CHRISTIANIA, Monday.—King Haakon took the oath to the Constitution in the Storting at noon to-day.

A Macclesfield town councillor, Charles Bewick, was remanded yesterday on a charge of stealing £384 while managing a sub-post-office.

Severe earthquake shocks were felt yesterday in various parts of Italy, the most serious taking place at Benevent, Foggia, Avellino, and Naples.

The Duke of Westminster has cabled his intention to give £5,000 to the Queen's Fund, on condition that that amount is handed over to the Church Army to be used by it in the relief of special distress.

TO-DAY'S WEATHER.

Our special weather forecast for to-day is: Fair, foggy, and frosty early; milder and unsettled later, with rain by evening.

Lighting-up time, 4.55 p.m.
Sea passages will continue rather rough generally.

EMPLOYING 1,000 UNEMPLOYED.

Work Going On in Eleven
Boroughs To-day.

BUILDING A SEWER.

Twenty-one Boroughs in Line with "Daily Mirror" Scheme.

NEARLY £1,000 SUBSCRIBED.

To-day the Daily Mirror's scheme employs 1,000 men!

Since the work began last Monday, 1,825 men had been employed up to last night. By this evening the number will be 2,825.

And that means that five times that number of persons will have been relieved, for all the men have wives, children, or relatives dependent on them.

So the readers of the Daily Mirror have saved 14,125 persons from hunger and cold during little more than a week. It is truly a great work.

As originally started, the men were only set to road-sweeping, but the usefulness of the work was developed.

To-morrow Finchley starts upon a piece of work of permanent value. A body of fifty men will be set to build a new sewer.

But for the money which the readers of the Daily Mirror have contributed the men and their families would have been facing want and privation, for the borough could not yet have afforded to set the men to work.

In Battersea 100 men are engaged again to-day in relaying a road—Cemetery-road, Battersea Rise. In Hackney, too, 125 are employed in mending Kenmore-road.

In Lambeth the men are divided into two gangs. One, of forty, are street-sweeping. The other gang of sixty men are at work "picking"—that is, breaking the tops of roads in preparation for mending.

In all, eleven boroughs are at work to-day, and twenty-one are now in line with the Daily Mirror scheme and only waiting their turn to begin.

Those at work to-day are:—

West Ham: 100 men street sweeping.	Paddington: 100 men street sweeping.
Battersea: 100 men relaying a road.	Fulham: 100 men street sweeping.
Finchley: 100 men street sweeping.	Hackney: 125 men road making.
Shoreditch: 50 men street sweeping.	Islington: 100 men street sweeping.
Lambeth: 100 men—40 street sweeping, 60 picking.	Lewisham: 25 men street sweeping.
Poplar: 100 men street sweeping.

Those that are still waiting their turn are:—

Bermondsey.	Tottenham.
Greenwich.	Bethnal Green.
Kensington.	Holborn.
Chelsea.	Finchley.

SETTING THE MEN TO WORK.

The business of setting the men to work is far simpler now than it was. Yesterday, though arrangements for 1,000 men had to be made, the borough councils were so ready to co-operate with the Daily Mirror that there was little to do but say "Go on," or "Start to-morrow."

And with the money coming in so generously as it did, the most cheerful messages could be given

AND THE MAID.

Wife Told To Leave Home To Please the Servant.

STRANGE DIVORCE SUIT.

"The parlour-maid does not like you, so you must go."

If they had been spoken by the housekeeper to the page-boy of Esthwaite Lodge, Hawkhead, near Kendal, these words would not have been a matter of much moment. They were addressed, however, by the master of the establishment, Mr. J. E. Troughton Dean, to his wife, Mrs. Troughton Dean.

As a result Mrs. Troughton Dean did as her husband ordered, and yesterday she brought a suit against him for divorce.

The grounds for her suit were cruelty and the very unusual behaviour of Mr. Troughton Dean, who is a solicitor, with the parlour-maid, a girl named Elsie Kirkby.

After Mr. and Mrs. Troughton Dean were married in 1893 they lived at first near Taunton, and then at Knutsford, in Cheshire, before they settled down at Esthwaite Lodge. It soon became apparent that the marriage was to be an unhappy one, and an incident occurred in 1899 that Mrs. Dean only consented to forgive for the sake of her family of four little ones.

"Threatened To Kill Me."

"He ill-treated me and gave me a black eye, and threatened to kill me," she said, describing her unhappiness.

Not content with threats, Mr. Dean made unfounded charges against his wife. It was because he brought private detectives to live in the lodge to watch her, she explained in the witness-box, that she left home in 1902, for some time, and stayed at her father's house.

When she returned she noticed with annoyance that a girl whom she had before refused to take into her service had become parlour-maid at the lodge.

The conduct of this girl, Elsie Kirkby, was very reverse of that associated with ordinary parlour-maids.

Mrs. Dean heard the girl laughing loudly at remarks made to Mr. Dean, and saw her engaged in confidential chats with him. There used to be private interviews between master and parlour-maid in the library. When the parlour-maid waited on the master they entered into familiar conversation.

Once Mr. Dean made a proposition to his wife. If she would agree to a deed of separation he would allow her £500 a year. This offer she declined.

Praised the Parlour-maid.

On another occasion, in his wife's presence, he told his children that he wished he had married the parlour-maid instead of their mother. It was during a meal, and Mr. Dean said: "Wouldn't you like to have Miss Kirkby for a mother? She is much more attractive. I wish that I had married her."

At this time the parlour-maid had left the house temporarily. Speaking of her absence, Mr. Dean said to Mrs. Dean: "I wish you would leave and take the children with you. Miss Kirkby does not like to be in the house when you are here."

But as Mrs. Dean as yet refused to accept her husband's bidding to go, the parlour-maid conquered her distaste for her mistress's presence and returned.

Mrs. Dean's sister was a guest in the house at the time, and this lady was asked by Mr. Dean to show the parlour-maid to her room. The young lady refused indignantly, so Mr. Dean performed the ceremony himself, and remained upstairs, it was stated, for a quarter of an hour, pointing out to the parlour-maid the arrangements made for her comfort.

Two days later Mrs. Dean, finding her position intolerable, did as her husband had suggested—she left him, taking her children with her.

One of the servants at the lodge gave evidence that she had seen Mr. Dean in the kitchen with the parlour-maid, and that he had had his arm round the parlour-maid's waist.

Mr. Justice Bargarve Deane granted a decree nisi to Mrs. Dean, to whom the task of speaking about the parlour-maid had obviously been extremely distasteful.

THE HON. MRS. CHETWYND.

Solicitors acting for the Hon. Mrs. Chetwynd in the case of two persons charged with attempted kidnapping deny the statement made in the Berwick Police Court that their client "had been under restraint for mental illness." She was removed, they state, but released immediately on the order of the Appeal Court.

STOLEN MOTOR-CAR TROPHY.

No information is to hand as to the whereabouts of the £1,000 motor-car trophy which was stolen from Messrs. Jarrold and Lettis's case, at Olympia, on Saturday.

GIRL IN MAN'S CLOTHES.

Masquerades as a Male as Reply to a Convict's Taunt.

The young woman who, dressed as a man, met with such a terrible end at Stockton-on-Tees, is now found to have led an extraordinary life of crime.

She was arrested as a man under the name of "J. Gillson," on a charge of having swindled people by representing herself as the agent of a key insurance company, and it was not until after her death that the secret of her sex was discovered.

Now it is found that, dressed as a woman, she was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment at the Old Bailey in May, 1904, for defrauding people by her bogus key registry.

In 1900, having received a good education, Miss Shilson, Miss James, or Miss Hill, as she was known at various times, came to London and obtained a situation with a property insurance company in Lombard-street.

After getting a little experience as a lady canvasser for this firm, the girl took a room in Mansion House-chambers, and set out canvassing on her own account, giving the name of her firm as "The Key Registry."

Bankers, merchants, City men of all types were taken in by the plausible canvasser. At one time she made £20 a week, and drove a smart dogcart round the City.

She was prosecuted in 1903 at the Clerkenwell Sessions for fraud, but managed to secure an acquittal. Again, in April, 1904, she was prosecuted at the Guildhall, but escaped with a warning, only to continue her criminal career, and be convicted in the following May.

Immediately after leaving prison she went to Bristol, and, disguised as a man, resumed her frauds. The masculine dress is said to have been adopted because an evasive male criminal taunted her with the statement that her previous successes were due to her feminine charms.

After a short time a warrant was issued for her arrest, and then she fled to the north, where, apparently, she pursued a similar method.

LADY HARTOPP FREE.

Decree Made Absolute in Famous Twice-Tried Divorce Suit.

The final act in one of the most prolonged and sensational divorce actions recently before the Courts was performed yesterday by Mr. Justice Bargarve Deane, who formally made absolute the decree nisi pronounced last April in the Hartopp v. Hartopp case.

This was the second action that Sir Charles Hartopp brought against his wife, who is a daughter of Mr. Charles Wilson, of Hull, the co-defendant in each case being Earl Cowley.

Lady Hartopp some time ago left for Ceylon, where, it was understood, she was to be married to Earl Cowley.

IRELAND IN LONDON.

Clever Actors from Dublin in Irish Plays at St. George's Hall.

Once more the Irish National Theatre Company have come to London. St. George's Hall echoes the soft accents of Hibernia. The broad humour and the sad-eyed philosophy of the Sister Isle are again delighting audiences "fit, though few."

The acting is very good. Mr. W. G. Fay is as clever and amusing as ever. In "Spreading the News," Lady Gregory's Irish village version of "The Three Black Crows," he provokes a continuous smile.

There are two performances again to-day. "Dodo," which the Stage Society produced yesterday at the Scala, is Mr. E. F. Benson's own belated version of his novel, which had a "success of scandal" some years ago. There are many amusing lines in it, and Miss Sarah Brooke played the name-part with feverish gaiety and quick temper. Mr. Benson must try his hand at a play again.

ADVERTISING BY MURDER.

Reprieve for English Author Who Killed a Chinaman in New Zealand.

The sentence of death passed on Lionel Terry, the young English author, who murdered a Chinaman at Welling, New Zealand, has been commuted to one of life imprisonment.

In view of the peculiar circumstances of the crime, the reprieve was not unexpected. Mr. Terry, it will be remembered, deliberately killed an elderly Chinaman in order to attract widespread attention to his book "The Shadow," in which he makes a striking protest against the "Yellow Peril."

VOYAGE OF THE DEAD.

Sad Home-Coming of Hilda Victims from St. Malo.

INQUEST OPENED.

All the flags in Southampton Harbour were flying at half-mast yesterday for the sad home-coming of the captain and crew of the ill-fated Hilda.

The London and South-Western Railway Company's steamer Ada brought the bodies from St. Malo, and a superstitious age would have thought that the relentless sea was pursuing them with hatred not satisfied even by death.

For the coffins had nearly been washed overboard while a smaller steamer was taking them from St. Cust, where they were cast up, to St. Malo, and the Ada coming from St. Malo encountered the full fury of the hurricane in the Channel.

So fierce was the storm that she was obliged to take the eastward passage round the Isle of Wight, and arrived at Southampton nearly four hours late.

Coffins surmounted by Wreaths.

In addition to the bodies of the members of the crew of the Hilda that Ada brought home the remains of Major Price, Miss Jessie Voss, Miss Denham, and Mr. Sykes.

The general public were excluded from the quayside, only relatives and friends of the deceased being admitted. The quay shed, draped with flags, had been converted into a temporary mortuary.

The coffins reposed on a temporary mortuary. They were one by one reverently swung ashore.

The body of Captain Gregory, skipper of the ill-fated vessel, was first to be landed, the coffin in which it was enclosed being surmounted by magnificent wreaths. Many other wreaths accompanied the coffins.

The sole English survivor of the wreck, Seaman Grinier, was seen on the deck of the Ada as she came alongside the quay. He was heartily welcomed by several seamen friends, and appeared little the worse for his terrible experience.

In the afternoon the inquest upon the bodies was opened, but only formal evidence of identification was taken, and the proceedings were then adjourned until this morning.

QUEER NEW DISEASE.

"Soul-Blindness" by Which Elderly Men Lose the Power To Read.

"Soul blindness" is the name given by a German physician, Dr. Schuster, to the affliction of a patient who, at the age of sixty, has suddenly lost all power to read printed or written words.

He can write correctly, but cannot, an instant later, read what he has written. Figures and numbers, however, present no difficulty to him.

"When you read," explained an eminent mind specialist in the Daily Mirror yesterday, "your mind goes through several distinct actions. You see, hear, feel, and think. Inability to do one or other of these actions produces some form of aphasia; and in the case before us it is aphia, or inability to read. An interruption has taken place in the connection between the patient's sight and his power of associating ideas."

A form of this new breakdown, not uncommon among overworked business men, shows itself in mistake in writing. You wish to write the word "arm," for instance, yet your pen shapes the word "hand." In some cases you will even transpose the letters of "hand," and write "dnah," or "ahnd."

SCENE AT CITY TEMPLE.

Enthusiast's Protest Against the Doctrines of the Rev. R. J. Campbell.

In connection with an exciting scene he created near the entrance of the City Temple on Sunday, John Green, of New Cross, appeared before Alderman Crosby at the Guildhall yesterday.

Green attended at the City Temple on Sunday night and had to be ejected, as he attempted to take exception to the doctrines of the Rev. R. J. Campbell.

Whilst the congregation were dispersing Green attempted to address them, describing the pastor as "a wolf in sheep's clothing." He was finally arrested for disorderly conduct.

The Alderman asked him if he would promise not to repeat the offence, but Green said he could not do that as he would have to speak if the spirit moved him.

He was ordered to find a surety for £25, and was bound over to keep the peace for six months.

IMPORTANCE OF "WE."

EMPTY STEAMBOATS.

L.C.C. Will Probably Decide To-day Stop the Useless Winter Service.

To-day the London County Council may be expected to come to a final decision over the farci winter steamboat service on the Thames.

The Rivers Committee has shown the flag surrender by suspending the workmen's service. It is inconceivable that after this confession of Council as a body will permit the farce to go on.

The normal objection of the Rivers Committee to discharge men who have been promised permanent employment can no longer be raised, as more than half of the crews and piermen have been dismissed, with the further reduction of service yesterday.

For the same reason, the objection that if steamboats are stopped the service next summer will have to begin with an untrained staff can no longer be raised.

According to the L.C.C.'s own showing, to make the boats pay with a full service running, every boat would require to earn an average of £10 17s. a day, or about 3s. 6d. a mile. For the past five weeks the boats have not been earning more than 9s. a mile, or £1 10s. a day each.

Even in the summer the service is badly handicapped by the extravagant management expenses. Here is an interesting comparison of the permanent staffs of the unsuccessful L.C.C. and the successful Thames Steamboat Company's services:

L.C.C.	Thames Steamboat Co.
1 Manager.	1 Manager (who does all the work at the firm's expense).
1 Inspector of pier.	1 Inspector of pier.
1 Inspector of boats.	1 Inspector of boats.
1 Inspector of gas and water.	1 Inspector of gas and water.

Allowing for the larger boats and service provided by the L.C.C., the discrepancy is glaring. The behaviour of the boats continues to deserve a good deal of the derision that greets every mishap. Yesterday five of them became hopelessly mixed up, and in trying to clear stuck fast in the mud near Vauxhall Bridge, where little boys jockeyed and ratenappers looked scandalised till the rising tide came to the boats' release.

MUCH-LOVED "DOCTOR."

Another Woman Tells of Her Affection for Miss To vey's Lover.

An unexpected witness yesterday in the trial at the Old Bailey of "Dr." Bridgewater and three companions for an alleged forgery plot was Miss Fuller, a tall, dark woman, dressed in a brown costume.

For eighteen months she was housekeeper at Bridgewater's establishment in Oxford-street. She met there a man named Blair, whom she identified as Fisher, the convict who alleges that he assisted the four accused in the forgery plot.

"You did not love him (Bridgewater) much?" asked counsel. "I did once," replied the witness sadly.

Evidence was also given by Mrs. Foster, an elderly woman, who is one of the accused. She had addressed Bridgewater as "My dear darling," but maintained that her relations with him were purely business.

The hearing was again adjourned.

WEALTH LOST FOR LOVE.

Italian Nobleman Marries a Pretty Dressmaker and Staves in a London Garret.

All the elements of romance lurked behind an apparently prosaic application for a summons for assault made by Mr. A. F. Clements, at Clerkenwell Police Court yesterday.

Mr. Clements stated that he appeared on behalf of the Old Bailey of the Marquis di Castro, who is the son and heir of the Marquis di Castro, of Naples.

Emerald told him, and hopelessly in love with a pretty dressmaker, and, resigning his regiment, brought her to England, and married her a few months ago in London.

His enraged father stopped his allowance, and the young lovers had had a hard struggle to live in a little room in Farringdon-road, the wife earning her living by sewing. Her hired machine was seized the other day, and on that occasion, it was alleged, she was assaulted.

The pair were in an almost destitute state. The summons was granted.

THE URGENT NEED.

TO-DAY the Daily Mirror Fund for giving the Unemployed immediate work has increased to about a thousand pounds.

We did not at first ask the public to subscribe at all. We simply started the Relief without Red-tape scheme by giving a hundred men 3s. 6d. a day to clean streets of which the dirtiness was a disgrace to the capital.

The public saw that it was a practical scheme. It did not entail any meetings of committees, or hiring of offices, or appointment of well-paid officials. It enabled people whose hearts were touched by the sad, pale, hunger-drawn faces they saw around them to send their money one day and to know that the starving and shivering were the better for it the next.

Gifts began to come in without being asked for, and the stream of subscriptions has grown from day to day. As fast as they arrive, arrangements are made for more and more men to be employed. This morning the number of those who will have work to go to instead of being forced to hang about in idleness is not far off 1,000.

In addition to the road-making discussed yesterday we have found a further example of permanently useful work which can be done by the Unemployed. At Finchley, a district which is rapidly developing, a new sewer is needed. In the ordinary course it would probably not be made for some little time to come.

The Daily Mirror will put fifty men to work upon its construction. They will be kept on for twelve days and paid 3s. 6d. a day. When they have finished they and their families will be the better off for two weeks' work, and Finchley for a necessary improvement.

This may not, as a critic of the Daily Mirror scheme has pointed out, "cure finally the Unemployed evil," but it surely goes some way to relieve it. The final cure must come from better education, better laws, better feeling between class and class.

At all events, we know that what we are doing is approved by many of the best authorities on Unemployment. Ample proof of this is supplied by the kind gift of £17 10s. (a day's work for 100 men) which we announce this morning from the Rev. Russell Wakefield, chairman of the committee of Her Majesty's Fund.

He realises, with full knowledge of the pitiful stress of poverty just now, the urgent need for something to be done AT ONCE.

MAN-LIKE WOMEN.

Another case of a woman passing as a man, living her whole life in disguise, altering, so far as is possible, her sex? What is it that makes women do this, and makes so many more (one often hears it) wish they had been born men?

Scarcely ever do you hear a man wish he were a woman. Yet women have in many ways greater chances of happiness—if they are content to be women.

Men often have to work all their lives at someone else's business. Women work for their homes and their children in a much more intimate way. They can see the results of their labour. They can, as a rule, work when they like and how they like. They are not bound by iron rules.

Do men have more freedom? Surely not. Is their life less monotonous? Not often. They have better health, as a sex, it is true, yet a strong, vigorous woman has more allowances made for her than has made even for a weakly man.

What is the cause of the widespread discontent among women? Does it rest upon argument, or is it merely due to a vague spirit of revolt?

A THOUGHT FOR TO-DAY.

The aids to noble life are all within.—Matthew Arnold.

THIS MORNING'S GOSSIP.

THE Federal Australian Minister for Trade and Customs, Sir William Lyne, has been prophesying that the next Federal elections will be fought on the tariff issue. Sir William is one of the surest authorities now alive on all Colonial matters. One of those proverbs which appear to have been invented merely to be disproved asserts that rolling stones gather no moss. Yet Sir William has fought his way up through an amazing variety of professions, never sticking very long to any one of them. In the course of his life he has been a bushman, a drover, a clerk, an inspector of works, clerk of petty sessions, squatter, speculator, boundary rider, and, last of all, a politician.

Sir William Lyne is a Tasmanian by birth, but his youth was spent mainly in Queensland. He arrived in that country, so Australians who know him say, one morning forty years ago, with nothing but the clothes he wore—these, too, were not worth mentioning, for they consisted of an old felt hat, a coat with holes in the elbows, trousers frequently patched, and boots falling to pieces. To-day he is one of the great men in Australian politics. His motto is said to be: "Everything comes to him who knows how to wait." No doubt, in his own fully, and kept repeating the phrase until counsel agreed to the ten minutes, then actually finished his statement within that time. One ought to give, too, an instance of Judge Lumley Smith's faculty of judicial illustration. Some years ago he heard a case brought by a gentleman who asserted that he had been run over by a cab as he was leaving a hotel—perhaps it might be called more bluntly, a public-house—at closing time.

The plaintiff seemed rather uncertain about the appearance of the cab, and whether two or only one had gone by at the moment of the accident. This looked suspicious. Whereupon the Judge remarked, "When people come out of a public-house at closing time they are probably in the position of the gentleman who, when leaving an old friend's house late, was told, 'If, when you get out of the door, you see two cabs there, take the back one—the other isn't there.'" The cabdriver in this case was, after that anecdote, at once acquitted.

A characteristic speech, in its blunt sincerity, was that made by Lord Wenlock before the Yorkshire Volunteers at Hull. He is one of those who think we ought to know the truth, even if it happens to be unpleasant, about the Army. Lord Wenlock is a favourite with the Prince of Wales, whom he case, the saying has proved true. The majority of men in these struggling days, however, generally find that Death has a way of coming and cutting them off while they are patiently waiting for "everything."

"Mr. Punch's" Christmas Annual is once more with us. As long as Christmas numbers keep appearing one feels convinced that the season of bills and plum-puddings is still at a safe distance. The Annual contains some very pretty drawings this year, some jokes of a kind not likely to interfere with digestion by inspiring any violent hilarity, and a picture in colours—here "Mr. Punch" tries something new—by Mr. Bernard Partridge.

His Honour Judge Lumley Smith, who has just been elected Treasurer of the Inner Temple for the coming year, is distinguished for his pleasant gift of humour even in these days when there is such active competition amongst the dignitaries of the Bench in the art of enlivening dull duties by comic sayings. Only four years ago he was appointed Judge of the City of London Court. He had then, and has increased since, a reputation for that great legal virtue—brevity, and he is always severe upon anyone in his court who may show a tendency to be long-winded.

He once confessed, indeed, that he liked "to pin counsel to a definite time. Otherwise," he added, "they go on for ever." Accordingly he once asked counsel if he could get done in ten minutes. "No, sir, twenty," was the reply. "Too much by half, too much, too much," said his Honour cheerfully, accompanied, as Chief of Staff, during the Colonial tour in the Ophir. And, indeed, he is one of those adventurous, courageous people who are always extremely popular with Englishmen. When he was at Eton he won immense admiration from his friends (so it is said) by running away from school to go to Ascot.

Lord Rosebery, according to this story (which is, I believe, authentic, and, anyhow, very beautiful), ran off with him. They had arranged for an elaborate disguise of false beards and moustaches, which was to be handed to them by the coachman, whom they had ordered to drive them to the races. The coachman, however, failed to turn up at the last moment, and the two boys were compelled to walk along an unusually dusty road, on an unpleasantly hot day, only to find, when they got to Ascot, that the races were nearly done. So they had to run, as fast as they could, back again, without beards of any kind, and in great danger of being discovered.

When Mr. Barrie's "Peter Pan" is revived for the Christmas season Miss Cecilia Loftus, as she now wishes to be called, is, I see, engaged to play the principal part. It is long since we have had the pleasure of seeing this demurely charming actress in London. Indeed, people are beginning to forget what an immense success she had years ago as an "infant" of well-known actors. People used to crowd to the music-hall, night after night, to hear Sarah Bernhardt, Yvette Guilbert, or Letty Lind, travestied with an inimitable, airy grace by "Cissy" Loftus.

HOW TO KEEP WARM AND HEALTHY.

To me, a most unwilling exile under the Stars and Stripes, where house-heating and all other heating is carried to such an absurd and unhealthy extreme, the subject, mooted in your excellent paper a few weeks back, "Shivering England," appeals most strongly.

God forbid that good old healthy England should ever substitute the furnace for the open grate. Is it any wonder that a nation which lives for seven months in a temperature between seventy and eighty degrees, with all ventilation carefully excluded, should be anemic and parchment-skinned?

My plan is simplicity itself, and the cost small for the comfort gained. In my drawing-room I have what is known as a ventilating grate. Exactly like an ordinary open grate to look at, it has a false back and air space, to which the pure, cool air from outside is conducted by an ordinary stove pipe.

This air passes around through the air space, and is heated, then passes out into the room through a grating in the top of the grate, or may be captured and carried up through pipes—as is done in my case, heating two rooms upstairs.

One is able to keep all doors and windows closed, yet abundance of good, clean, warm air is pouring into the house constantly, forcing any impure air through the draught of the fire up the chimney.

SHOULD MARRIED WOMEN WORK?

I want the opinion of the readers of the Daily Mirror on married women and work.

I live in one of the most thickly-populated boroughs of London. On my way to business I meet several married women going to their daily duties, more especially to our Board-schools.

Most of them have husbands in regular employment and earning good wages. Why don't they do a wife's duty by staying at home and looking after the house, and, in some cases, their children?

Then the single girls that need work might stand a chance. A BUSINESS GIRL.

DANGEROUS ROCKS AT SEA.

Might I suggest to "Constant Reader" that, after he has shown the various maritime Powers where to find the few paltry billions necessary for the little undertaking he proposes (blowing up dangerous rocks at sea), he should turn his attention to the crying need there is of dredging all the sandbanks and shoals away, providing all rocky promontories with spring buffers, and anchoring icebergs out of the way of traffic?

TWO MEN OF THE MOMENT.

Lord Rosebery and Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman.

THEY have just succeeded, without any apparent effort, in splitting the Liberal Party once again into two sections. Lord Rosebery has emphatically declared against Home Rule; "C.B." wants to see the glorious time when Irish affairs shall be "in the hands of a representative Irish Party."

In spite of this strong divergence on a particular subject, their general conception of the game of politics appears to be the same.

Lord Rosebery once summed it up thus: "I never have been two supreme pleasures in my life—one ideal, the other real. The ideal joy was felt in receiving the seals of office at the hands of the Sovereign; the real pleasure came when I carried them back."

Sir Henry, in a similar but more colloquial strain, once said: "The public think we politicians are longing for power, whereas we'd all just be glad if someone would come and do the beastly work for us."

Yet time has made a slight difference in these once identical points of view.

One remembers that three ambitions were formed by Lord Rosebery in the beginning of his life. He wanted to be Prime Minister, to marry an heiress, and to win the Derby. He has fulfilled each of these ambitions—found the first at least as ashes in the mouth, and is now in consequence a little disabused, disillusioned, disappointed.

Sir Henry, on the other hand, never having had any such decided hopes, has had fewer disappointments. He has worked harder and harder as time has gone by; Lord Rosebery has been more inclined to watch from the fence, or plough the lonely furrow, to use one of those vaguely agricultural metaphors that he himself affects to express his critical attitude.

IN MY GARDEN.

NOVEMBER 27.—Autumn gales—autumn hurricanes rather—have come late, and to-day one might imagine oneself in the middle of October, with the leaves ceaselessly scurrying under one's feet.

What could be more sinister than this loud voice of the wind, all night, mingling its fierce music to one another—this fury of nature tearing her handiwork to pieces?

After a windy night the garden looks a wrecked and barren place, where the only work to be done is in tidying the branch-strewn paths. E. P. T.

CHAPTER XXIV. (continued).

When Pym opened the door, the corridor was empty; but a faint perfume, as of new-mown hay, still clung to the atmosphere, and it seemed to him that he heard again the faint swish of a gown.

"She was probably listening," said Pym, closing the door.

He was rapidly rolling a cigarette between his thin fingers. Balshaw had dropped back again to the easy-chair.

"John," he said. "You used Burke Foskett very effectively. You struck hard, suddenly, and sharply. It was deftly and naturally done, too. Your friend, the prison chaplain, was distinctly proud."

He laughed cynically. But he was not altogether sure whether Pym had not acted a little prematurely. The woman was still a riddle. Did she only suspect him of being Roland Carstairs, or had he completely betrayed himself in his delirium?

He put the question to Pym.

"She knows," whispered the slave of the lamp. "I'm sure instinctively that she knows. B-Burke Foskett will hold her in check as long as she remains normal. The mention of the name was good enough to-day. Give me three weeks, and I will have the details of her relations with this man at my finger-tips. But you cannot work out a human as you would an algebraic problem. T-That woman knows of your infatuation for Clare Mainwaring."

Balshaw interrupted. His steady eyes gleamed; there was a note of stern anger in his voice.

"Choose your words more carefully, John!"

"Let us say, 'I love' then," stammered Pym; "but you and I define the word differently."

"Are you sure?" asked Balshaw, quietly.

"C-certain! Love is not love when it lacks truth and the spirit of self-sacrifice. It is only passion then—plus egotism. It is colossal selfishness. It is base metal that has the glitter of gold about the substance."

Pym's cigarette had become unrolled. He twisted it up again with his nervous fingers.

"I believe that this woman," said Pym, the pathos of his big eyes yielding to an expression of hate, "has deliberately engineered this present situation, purposely bringing Rose King and Clare Mainwaring together in order to keep you at a distance. A very skilful move. You have tremendous strength; but you would turn coward at the thought of her exposed before C-Clare Mainwaring, of all people in the world! T-That woman realises this!"

"And as well as this," continued Pym, "she has a weapon of revenge and destruction ready to hand—in Rose King."

Balshaw's soul beat still. His face told Pym nothing. A knock on the door heralded Charles's entrance.

"I thought, sir," said Charles, "that you might like an evening paper. It contains a report of this morning's trial," he coughed apologetically. "I was present this morning. I must admit now that Vance evidently knew what he was about when he removed the window. Wonderful things finger-prints, sir."

"Quite so," said Balshaw, in a manner that precluded further conversation on the subject. Charles deposited the paper and retired.

Pym opened the paper and read aloud:

"Much interest was evinced when Detective-Sergeant Vance, armed with a business-like little pen, stepped to the head of the witness box, and of the distinguished crime-investigator was distinctly disappointing. One could almost detect a murmur of disappointment from the crowded court as the detective, dressed in blue serge and looking like a respectable artisan, tucked his cloth cap away in a pocket and took the oath stolidly. He explained quite simply how the several impressions of finger-prints taken from the window through which the burglar had gained access were compared with certain records at Scotland Yard, and how one particular set corresponded with those of Heenan's. Taken sharply to task by Heenan's counsel, Vance who preserved the same stolid imperturbable manner throughout, explained that he caused the finger-prints to be compared with Heenan's because of the marked similarity of the methods adopted at Postern Abbey and Heenan's methods. There was some laughter in court when Vance added that the proof of the pudding lay in the eating. When he arrested Heenan a portion of the stolen plate was found on the premises. He was just in time to prevent its disappearance into the melting-pot. He further explained how the stolen property had been transferred piecemeal from Leicester to London by Joshua King. He admitted candidly that but for a mistake on Heenan's part he would probably not have brought King's share in the crime home to him; but when Heenan endeavoured to swallow and eat a piece of paper, whilst keeping Vance at bay with a heavy steel implement, the detective felt curious. He explained to the Court how he had compelled Heenan to disgorge the envelope containing King's name and address on it, before it had been properly mutilated. In consequence King had been arrested and his house searched, with a positive result. At the request of the judge, the finger-print impressions were shown to the jury. In answer to a question, Vance explained that several persons had fingered the window, and no fewer than four separate and distinct impressions had been taken; but the impressions that corresponded with Heenan's, not in the matter of a single finger, but four, had been found both inside and outside the window. It was after the conclusion of Vance's evidence that the foreman of the jury intimated that he and his colleagues had heard sufficient evidence, and found both Heenan and King guilty without leaving the box."

Pym laid aside the paper, and glanced at Balshaw. The latter was yawning.

"Rule-of-thumb work," he remarked lazily, "backed up by pluck. Heenan must have taken some tackling; but I don't think Vance's work is marked by any brilliancy. I know he is still something of a bete-noir to you, John."

"I'm thinking of those finger-prints," whispered Pym. "Your record was probably among them. Did they measure you and take impressions at the time of your conviction?"

"Yes," answered Balshaw, with a smile; "but, my dear, good John, they have thousands of records. The possibility of Vance comparing his discarded records—only Heenan's were of value after the others had been discarded by a process of elimination—the possibility of Vance comparing the others gratuitously with the Scotland Yard records is too remote to give one a moment's uneasiness."

He reached out for a cigar. For a moment the burglary had driven other thoughts from his mind. He was the imperturbable, self-confident gentleman of fortune, the man who had faced Sir Doyle and Roland Carstairs.

"At the same time," he added, as Pym held a light to his cigar, "I am not sorry that I was not called on to give evidence. It would have been awkward with King standing in the dock."

Then his face went thoughtful suddenly, and his lines deepened. Rose King had taken possession of his thoughts again—Rose and Clare.

Charles knocked, and entered bearing letters. Balshaw took them from him. Pym saw his face darken with a glow of colour.

"This letter," said Balshaw harshly, when the servant had retired, "should have reached me by the first post."

Pym writhed silently, and, taking the letter from him, opened it and handed back the contents. It was in Clare's handwriting. His thin hands were opening and shutting with nervous tension as he watched Balshaw read. He saw amazement on the lean face; then a sudden knitting together of the brows, and a tightening of the mouth into the old, straight line.

"T-tell me!" stammered Pym. "W-what is it?"

Balshaw rose heavily and stiffly from his chair. "Give me my cheque-book, John," he said in tones devoid of all inflection.

Pym stared at him dazedly. He did not understand.

"Give me my cheque-book," Pym brought him the book.

"You're forgetting," he whispered. "Your left-handed signature is no good. They won't honour it, probably."

"I was forgetting—you're right. You do it, John."

Pym sat himself down. Balshaw stood at his elbow.

"Make it out for £1,000."

"A thousand pounds?" echoed Pym. "To whom payable?"

"I'll fill that in."

Pym wrote the cheque and signed it "Richard Balshaw, per pro. John Pym." Then he rose up, and Balshaw took his place and filled in the name of the payee with his left hand. The money was payable to Clare Mainwaring. Then he scribbled a brief note, and thrust it with the cheque into an envelope. When he had addressed it slowly and with much labour he gave it to Pym.

"Take it into Leicester, John; register it. I want it to be delivered by the first post to-morrow."

The letter was addressed to Clare Mainwaring! Pym stared strangely at the superscription.

"You—y-you are lending her money?"

"Yes. Go to once. We can talk later."

"Oh, but tell me," pleaded Pym feverishly. "What is it now? What dreadful complication?"

"Go!"

The slave of the lamp winced under the sharp command, and glided like a shadow from the room. Balshaw sank back heavily in the easy-chair and drew Clare's letter from a pocket. He was breathing heavily; yet there was a light of fierce joy now in his eyes. She had come to him in her time of trouble.

Holloway's Comfortable Provision for its Child Population.

24 IN THE NURSERY.

By MISS ANNESLEY KENEALY.

It comes as a shock to most people to learn that all women's prisons possess a baby population. "Babies ought not to be sent to prison" is the sentiment of the superficial philanthropist.

But experience proves that the infants of women prisoners who are not "committed" with their mothers nearly always die. And His Majesty's Prison Commission, at the suggestion of Sir Evelyn Ruggles Brice, have solved the problem of the prison baby by the establishment of charming crèches in all the big prisons where feminine offenders must congregate. Thus London, Liverpool, Manchester, Durham, and Birmingham Prisons each boasts a model nursery for the infants of their inmates.

HAPPY COMFORTABLE HOME.

Holloway Prison, in the north of London, possesses a small baby paradise, which holds some twenty-four infants of women "doing time" in the cells. Many of the babies are born in the model maternity ward which Holloway Prison boasts. Others have passed straight from the dock, where their mothers have been found guilty of offences ranging from drunk and disorderly to the more serious crimes of burglary and arson.

Prison is rarely regarded as a desirable place of residence, but all the babies in Holloway Prison crèche assembled are enthusiastic in their praise of the only happy, comfortable home many of them are likely to experience throughout their sad little lives. They express their delight in a chorus of coos and gurgles, for only by a rare piece of luck may a baby's term of imprisonment range beyond nine months. Regulations insist that at this age he shall be handed over to friends "outside"; failing these to his parish workhouse. But the quality of prison mercy is pitiful and not strained. Should the prison baby be delicate, or the victim of semi-starvation and neglect before good fortune led him to the kindly care of the crèche, he may be kept under medical supervision and tender nursing until he is fifteen months old.

SUMMER MONTHS IN A TENT.

Each baby sleeps at night in his mother's cell in a pretty little cot beside her plank bed. All day he rejoices in the company of his kind in the sunny, warm prison crèche, gaily decorated with Millais' pictures of "Bubbles," "Cherry Ripe," "Cinderella," etc. Here he is fed sumptuously, like a City alderman, his weekly weighing-sheet sometimes showing an increase of 1lb. to 1½lb. Twice a day his mother is allowed to visit him, and when fine to take him for an airing in the babies' garden. During the hot summer months the crèche babies spend their days under a canvas tent, lying, crawling, and disporting themselves on blankets strewn on the grass. This open-air cure has a splendid effect on their health and development, says Dr. Quinton, the prison governor, who takes the keenest interest in the babies' crèche.

The crèche uniform is of black and white checked flannel, with pretty blue and white spotted pinafores. No broad arrow stamps these, nor the quaint little hoods and pelisses worn in their airings in the babies' garden. But the ominous brand appears on the Lilliputian fleecy flannels underneath and on the linen of the dainty lacquered cots and cosy rockered wicker bassinets with which the crèche is bountifully provided.

KEYS AS BABIES' TOYS.

But what do these pretty little laughing, contented babies know of crime and broad arrows? "Stone walls do not a prison make," and the babies live in a warm, cheerful atmosphere of kindness and petting from women warders placed on duty in the crèche by reason of their love for little children. And all the babies believe as the first article of their faith that those jangling keys at the warders' waists are provided by a delightful prison board as delectable toys to soothe the weariness of sore and teething gums. The keys are not symbols of imprisonment. They are but charming additions to the fluffy rabbits, dancing-girls, and pierrots furnished from the prison toy cupboard for the gurgling delight of these pathetic little children of misfortune.

Before crèches were established the babies of women prisoners used to be entirely under their mothers' care in the cells both by day and by night, but so much neglect and cruelty was practised on some of these hapless little bairns by callous mothers that crèches were started to protect the infant prison population. The results in improved health and physique have been magnificent. Holloway Prison was built on the lines of Warwick Castle in 1851 at a cost of £100,000, and throughout criminal London anybody imprisoned there is euphoniously and charitably described by his friends as being "up at the Castle."

Interesting photographs of the Holloway Prison crèche appear on pages 8 and 9.

Since the "Daily Mirror" scheme for engaging the unemployed in the various boroughs has been working we have received innumerable letters of thanks and appreciation. Above are letters from the borough superintendents of Finsbury and the town clerks of Greenwich and Shoreditch thanking us for the work we have found for their unemployed. One also from the Mayor of Islington asking us to find work for the unemployed in his borough.

fail to achieve this. The fact that even a single pile on the face will make it look unpleasant, and hence everyone who takes pride in their looks is anxious to remove skin blemishes. It is, of course, a bad blunder to make a surface cure and drive the trouble inward, but if the right treatment is adopted, the trouble will be no danger of this. The trouble will have a clear, pure, and healthy skin again.

There is no expense, and very little trouble involved in having a healthy skin, instead of one disfigured by spots or blemishes. If you continue to have the latter it is because you refuse to adopt the "Antexema" treatment, which is very simple, but at the same time marvellously successful, and is as good for such serious trouble as eczema, psoriasis and nettle rash, as for pimples, blotches, blackheads, chaps, chilblains, and other minor forms of skin trouble. It is really extraordinary that anyone should go about feeling uncomfortable or looking unsightly when "Antexema" will completely clear the skin of that which disfigures it.

FORMS OF SKIN ILLNESS

The variety of skin ailments is innumerable, and anyone looking through our family handbook on "Skin Troubles" will find information in regard to the following amongst others: skin affections: Acne, babies' skin troubles, bad complexions, barbers' itch, boils, blotches, burns, and scalds, dandruff, delicate, sensitive, irritable, easily-chapped skin; skin troubles affecting the ears, eyes, feet, hands, and scalp; eczema, chronic and acute; eczema of the legs, erysipelas, facial blemishes, flushing, gouty eczema, leg wounds, lip and chin troubles, nettle rash, piles, pimples, psoriasis, ringworm, scrofula, and shingles. These are some of the troubles that affect the skin, many of them unsightly, and all causing discomfort, if not acute pain.

NOTE THE FIRST SIGNS OF SKIN ILLNESS

Immediately your skin looks red, rough, or has pimples upon it, give it attention. Don't imagine you will get over your trouble by letting things take their course. It is true, because so many people fancy that slight skin ailments will cure themselves that they have bad complexions or are disfigured with breakings out. We have been delighted by the evidence we have had of the interest our readers take in the subject of skin health, and the hundreds of letters received daily prove that our advice has been appreciated.

TAKE OUR ADVICE AND WRITE TO-DAY

"Antexema" is supplied by all Chemists and Stores at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., or will be sent direct post free in plain wrapper for 1s. 3d. or 2s. 6d. We are anxious to convince you of the value of "Antexema," and we therefore make this special offer, but we warn you that this offer will be shortly withdrawn, so that you had better accept it now. We will send a free sample of "Antexema," together with our interesting and useful handbook on "Skin Troubles," which explains the cause, nature, and cure of all forms of skin illness. To obtain the sample and little book send three stamps for postage and packing, mention the "Daily Mirror," and address your letter to "Antexema," 83, Castle-road, London, N.W.

SEASONABLE RECIPES FOR THE CULT OF BEAUTY.

THE SUBJECT OF COMELINESS.

A HINT FOR MEN TO FOLLOW WHEN MOTORING IN WINTER.

"I can imagine that a combination of lard and oatmeal would be excellent for cleansing the skin," remarked Belinda. "But could you give me a recipe for cream that does not contain lard, and yet is not very expensive?"

"For winter weather, and especially for putting on the face before motoring or driving in the open air, I can recommend the following formula," said Mrs. Templer. "I may also say that this makes and two ounces of distilled water. Apply it night and morning."

Julia took up a letter from the writing-table. "Can you tell me how to make rose jelly?" she asked. "Lesbia says she has heard it is excellent for keeping the hands white and soft in cold weather."

Mrs. Templer consulted her book of recipes for beautifying the skin.

The ingredients for rose jelly are two ounces of moulage of Irish moss, three ounces of glycerine, two ounces of extract of witch hazel, one ounce of eau de Cologne, and thirty grains of borax. Dissolve the borax in the witch hazel, mix it with half of the glycerine and Cologne, and add sufficient oil of roses to perfume it.

"Mix the other part of the glycerine and moulage, and stir it slowly into the part first prepared. After allowing it to stand three hours, strain it, and it will be ready for use."

"What do you think is the best cosmetic for the an excellent cream for men, to be applied after shaving."

"I must tell Jack," interposed Belinda. "He has the most sensitive skin and is always asking me what he can use."

"If his skin is very sensitive he should harden it by using a lotion composed of alum and rose-water, to be applied directly after shaving. But this cream will also help to keep his skin in good order."

For a Shiny Nose.

"Lesbia wants a motoring cream," said Julia, "so I must write down your directions."

"Place one ounce of shredded white wax with one ounce of white vaseline and four ounces of almond oil, in a basin. Let this stand in a pan of boiling water until it melts. Take it off the fire and beat into it by degrees one ounce of distilled or rose water, with as much powdered borax as will lie on a sixpence. Beat it for at least twenty minutes until the ingredients are all thoroughly incorporated, and scent it with any perfume that is desired."

"I must say that I am always thankful for one mercy," remarked Belinda thoughtfully. "At least, I am not troubled with a shining nose. Now, Miriam Travers always looks greyer about the nasal organ, and I long to give her a remedy."

"She might try this formula," observed Mrs. Templer. "Mix four grains of sulphate of zinc, sixteen drops of compound tincture of lavender, face?" asked Belinda. "I suppose each individual requires a different treatment."

Mrs. Templer's tone was emphatic. "Health is the best cosmetic," she said impressively. "And no beautifying agent avails much when it has to battle constantly against ill-health. Women with overwrought nerves, for instance, would fare much better in their complexion if they took a fortnight's complete rest, forgot to worry, and indulged in a good, but simple, diet, than if they purchased the most expensive lotions."

Belinda shook her head gently. "It is much more interesting to apply some pleasing cosmetic to one's face than merely to take a fortnight's rest and do nothing," she said. "But, now, give me something to arrest falling hair. One of my friends says she is rapidly becoming bald, and requires a tonic."

"Electric Hair Brushing." "She should consult a doctor about her general health, as this may be the cause of the falling hair," replied Mrs. Templer. "Then she should try electric brushing, as this stimulates the growth of the hair and greatly improves its appearance."

Knowledge is Power

Books Impart Knowledge,
Knowledge is Power;
Therefore Books Give Power.

Knowledge not Brain Fag

To some people the word knowledge means profound study, brain fag, the consumption of midnight oil, poring over dry-as-dust volumes. But the knowledge that gives power to take full advantage of one's opportunities is not of this kind.

A Whole Lifetime or a Few Hours

This particular knowledge can only be acquired in two ways. One is by spending a whole lifetime gathering experience, the other way is by reading the experiences of those who have left the record of their lives and thoughts for the benefit of their fellow-men. In the latter way you can learn in a few hours what other men have taken a lifetime to acquire.

Lloyd's Solves the Difficulty

By the enterprise of "Lloyd's News," however, this intensely interesting reading is brought within the reach of everyone, at a price and on terms that would be impossible but for the fact that "Lloyd's News" wants a big advertisement, and is selling 200,000 complete Libraries of 20 superb volumes, with a handsome fumed-oak bookcase, at 2s. 6d. down, the balance at 5s. a month, in the belief that it will thereby gain hundreds of thousands of new readers.

20 Large Volumes, 10,000 Pages

This Library is the International Library, which was gathered together by the greatest living book experts from the Library of the British Museum, the National Library of France, of Germany, and of America, who collected the masterpieces of the world's master writers from all the ages and all the great nations of the world into 20 large volumes of 10,000 big pages—enough reading to last a lifetime, and consisting of the best things ever written.

Eminent Men have Bought it

This International Library, a unique world library, is in many of the stately homes of England, and has been largely purchased by many distinguished members of the Bench, the Bar, and the learned professions. Famous financiers like Lord Rothschild and Joseph B. Robinson have bought the Library, and their judgment is known to be good. They own very large libraries, but bought the International because they have no time to waste in reading anything except the brightest and best.

Wholesale Reductions

The 20,000 sets of the Library already sold paid the enormous editorial and other costs of making such a great work. By selling 200,000 sets and 200,000 specially-designed fumed oak bookcases, "Lloyd's News" is enabled to buy materials in such enormous quantities as to secure enormous reductions in the cost of manufacturing without cheapening the quality in any way, and as there are no middlemen, but we are selling these as a novel advertising project, and not for profit-making on the sale, we give you the whole benefit of these great savings.

Easier to Own than to Borrow

All in all this is an opportunity to secure the wealth of the world's reading on terms that make it easier for you to own your own library than to go borrowing books.

For 2s. 6d. down and 5s. a month you can become the possessor of this "Open Sesame" to the delightful world of good books, to the helpful, stimulating examples set before us by great writers.

A Brilliant Company

Here we may converse with the really great rulers and brilliant statesmen, with their words of wisdom; orators, with their masterly language; fiction writers, with their plots and situations from the drama of life; historians, with their splendid pageants, their power to lift the veil of the past so that you may form opinions as to the future. It is a society in which you can never find a dull moment, never read a line that does not make for self-improvement.

The Enjoyment of it All

What can be more enjoyable or more restful to the mind after the work of the day is done than to turn to these bright books? Away will go care, as you lose yourself in some absorbing story by one of the great masters of fiction, or as you follow the graphic record of some magic-penned historian as he invests with new life the great men and great events of the past. The whole world of books is there to choose from—poetry, humor, travel and adventure, the drama, etc., etc. Whatever your taste may be, these twenty big volumes will amply satisfy you.

Brain Sharpening

Most of the great fortunes of the world have been made by men who have read shrewdly, and have sharpened their wits upon the wisdom of all the centuries gathered together in the world's great books.

By reading the right books you can acquire the knowledge that embodies the thoughts and actions of six thousand years. But "the right books" are overwhelmed by the wrong ones, and most men have neither the leisure nor inclination to spend the enormous amount of time and effort necessary to hunt through thousands of volumes for the relatively few best books which both interest the reader and impart knowledge.

How the Library is Welcomed

Every post brings us enthusiastic words of approval from hundreds of delighted possessors of the Library. Here are a few short extracts. All are in the same vein, and the chorus of praise increases in volume day by day. H. Metcalf, of Primrose Hill, Wakefield, says:—"I would sooner part with any of my furniture now than part with the Library." The Rev. James J. A. Loney, of Swindon, writes:—"I have spent my life in the midst of books, and my numerous and my anticipations have been more than fulfilled." R. I. Spence, 13, Wootlesley Road, Plumstead, S.E., writes:—"Your generous offer has given me the opportunity of possessing a splendid Library; I am proud to own such an excellent collection." E. Wingrave, 272, Romford Road, Forest Gate, says:—"I can hardly express how delighted I am. The books are the greatest bargain I have ever had." R. Sendell, 20, Hershell Road, Epsom, writes:—"I regard the volumes as a splendid mode of recreation for persons of all ages and positions." Mr. R. O. Dunn, 6, Rupert Road, West Kilburn, says:—"I cannot praise the Library, because it is beyond all praise." Such expressions as the following occur in many letters:—"Something to be proud of"; "Enough reading for a lifetime"; "The best set of books I have ever handled"; and so on indefinitely.

Pictures and Portraits

The twenty volumes are beautified by an interesting and valuable collection of 500 full-page illustrations. These pictures are good and to the point. They include over 800 portraits of authors and authorities, those of the famous dead being in all cases from authentic sources, while those of living writers are mostly from special photographs, and comprise a most attractive series of pictures of authors in their studies. Thus we have Thomas Hardy, Mrs. Humphry Ward, Tolstol, Hall Caine, Henry James, James Bryce, and many others, as they are life in their studies, and there are scores of charmingly executed views of the homes of celebrated authors.

2/6 Own Brins Books and Bookcase

You can have all this book wealth at once, carriage paid, for 2s. 6d. down and 5s. a month until purchase is completed. These are not books sent out in fortnightly parts, not books at the rate of one each for an interminable period. They are not books by English authors only, but by all the great foreign authors, too, done into faultless English. The entire Library of the best writings from every country in the world, the 20 big books and the bookcase, all together, are yours to enjoy immediately.
